The new Photoshop on the web provides a consistent URL for your projects. You can create, save, save to FTP, download, and share the same project, all from one URL. You can also open a project directly from your desktop or from a URL. You can also share projects you've created in Photoshop on the web. In addition to the new app, we are also releasing the first version of Photoshop on the web as an app you can install and remove just like any other app. This means you can use Photoshop on your iPad, iPhone, Android tablet or phone, and provide consistency and layout for your work across all of your devices and scenarios. This includes the ability to save directly to your desktop, as you would with any other Photoshop application. This version also continues to provide the best performance of any web app with no ads and no idling tabs. And that means you can take Photoshop to your tablet, start editing right away, and then continue the project on your computer. You can share projects across all devices. To do this, create a project on your desktop, and save it to that same URL on the web. Because the same project URL is shared to the web, mobile browsers know that you are working on the same project and won't unnecessarily duplicate files or download duplicate assets, which can cause performance bottlenecks. First released in September 2018, the Photoshop for Web app is available in a browser, and is optimized for use with all modern desktop and mobile web browsers. It provides a number of advantages over the mobile version of Photoshop, including the addition of many of the new web standard image editing features and greater access to both Photoshop features and Photoshop industry-leading assets than the mobile version, such as the ability to share projects directly from a browser and best-in-class performance. The company says the Photoshop for Web app provides fluid editing with no idle tabs, no ads, and no all-caps pop-up windows, so you can spend more time working than being distracted by distractions.
